Southwest Airlines is expected to post a profit when it reports first quarter results, reversing a loss a year earlier, as demand holds up and cost controls take effect. Investors will be watching for management’s comments on the recent jet fuel price shock and how the carrier plans to mitigate higher fuel costs. Separately, American Airlines is expected to report a smaller first-quarter loss. Investors will be looking for signs that stronger premium and corporate demand are enough to steady an airline that remains more exposed than its larger rivals to fuel-cost pressures and execution risk.

REUTERS/Dado Ruvic

American Express is expected to report higher first-quarter profit, as its affluent customer base continues to spend. Analysts and investors will focus on executive commentary on consumer health, as well as the impact of Middle East turmoil on the quarter and the rest of the year.

When Lockheed Martin posts its first-quarter results, analysts will be on the watch for comments on Patriot missile production amid heightened geopolitical tensions.

REUTERS/Mike Segar

Blackstone is expected to report a rise in first-quarter profit. Investors will watch for commentary around private credit and other investments on its book.

Thermo Fisher is expected to publish its first-quarter results. Investor focus will be on the performance of its products used in drug development and any cost impact from the U.S.-Israel war on Iran.

Nasdaq is expected to report a rise in first-quarter profit, as the exchange operator is set to benefit from increased trading as markets remained volatile.

Oilfield services company Baker Hughes is expected to post higher first quarter earnings compared with a year earlier, supported by improving drilling activity as the company added oil and natural gas rigs during the period. Investors will watch out for updates on its plan to sell about $10 billion in cross border bonds, as well as progress in securing licenses to use key drilling equipment already in the country and to bring in rigs and specialized gear, steps seen as crucial to reviving output, though its existing licenses do not allow rig operations or expansion.

Comcast is expected to post a rise in revenue when it reports first-quarter results, driven by strong theme park attendance.

U.S. beverage maker Keurig Dr Pepper is expected to post a rise in first-quarter sales owing to steady demand for its carbonated as well as energy drinks. Investors will be looking out for any comments on its pending deal with Dutch coffee and tea group JDE Peet's, impact from the middle east disruption and demand forecast for the remainder of the year.

U.S. utility Nextera Energy is expected to report a fall in the first-quarter adjusted profit, due to higher costs amid higher power demand.

Union Pacific is scheduled to report its first-quarter results. Analysts, on average, expect the railroad operator to post a year-over-year increase in both quarterly revenue and profit per share, according to LSEG data.

REUTERS/Dado Ruvic

Honeywell is expected to post its first-quarter results before the bell, with investors expecting profits to be hurt by Middle Est exposure and airline capacity cuts driven by surge in jet fuel prices.

Newmont is due to report first quarter earnings, with investor attention on production and cost discipline as the world’s top gold miner looks to capitalize on elevated bullion prices.

Freeport-McMoRan is scheduled to report its first-quarter earnings. Investors will be closely focused on management commentary and any updates related to the Grasberg mine, which remains a key driver of the company’s operational performance and long-term outlook.

Ameriprise Financial is expected to post higher first quarter profit, helped by higher fee income.

Edwards Lifesciences is expected to post its first-quarter results after markets close. Investor focus will be on the performance of its artificial heart valves.

California utility PG&E Corp is expected to report a profit for its first-quarter results. Investors will be on the lookout for commentary on power demand growth driven by AI and data centers.

Hartford is scheduled to report first-quarter results after markets close. Investors will keep a close eye on management commentary on insurance pricing trends.

CenterPoint Energy is expected to post a profit in its first-quarter earnings. Investors will look for commentary on demand growth driven by AI and data centers.

Principal Financial Group is slated to report first-quarter results after markets close. Investors will parse management commentary on pricing trends and exposure to private credit.

Medical equipment maker West Pharmaceutical Services is expected to report its first-quarter results. Investor focus will be on the demand for diabetes and obesity treatments that use its medical equipment and any changes to its annual forecast.

Teck Resources is scheduled to report its first-quarter results. Investors will be on the lookout for updates on the Anglo-Teck merger and also confirmation if copper production at the Quebrada Blanca mine in Chile is reaching ramp up targets.

On the Latin American front, Mexico's statistics agency, INEGI, is set to publish inflation figures for April. Consumer prices are expected to rise 0.09% in the first half of April, after having risen 0.62% during the first half of March. In the 12 months through mid-April, consumer prices are forecast to rise 4.5%, down from a reading of 4.63% earlier. Retail sales for February are also due. On a monthly basis, retail sales are expected to decrease 0.1%, following an increase of 1% in January. Annually, it likely rose 4.3% following a reading of 5% previously. Argentina's statistics agency INDEC is also expected to report retail sales figures.

Market Monitor

Wall Street climbed after U.S. President Donald Trump extended the ceasefire with Iran, even as uncertainty remained over whether Tehran and U.S. ally Israel would honor the truce. "It's possible that we see a continuation of negative headlines, ultimatums and deadlines for negotiations, but that doesn't mean that stocks will react meaningfully to each one, since markets already priced in the worst of the conflict during the lows made back in March," said Rick Gardner, chief investment officer, RGA Investments. The Dow Jones Industrial Average rose 0.69% to 49,490.34, the S&P 500 gained 1.05% to 7,137.89 and the Nasdaq Composite jumped 1.64% to 24,657.57.

Treasury yields edged higher, trading within narrow ranges, as investors remained cautious with an extended ceasefire between the United States and Iran already under strain after Iran seized two vessels in the strategically vital Strait of Hormuz over alleged maritime violations. "The market seems to be taking any sign of a pause in the conflict as a set-up for a longer-term settlement," said Vinny Bleau, director, fixed income research, at Raymond James in Memphis. Treasury Department sold $13 billion in 20-year notes at a high yield of 4.883%. The bid to cover ratio was 2.68. The two-year notes fell 1/32, yielding 3.8001%. The 10-year notes were down 3/32 to yield 4.3015%. The 30-year bonds lost 5/32, yielding 4.9071%.

The dollar rose on lingering concerns about the ongoing U.S.-Israeli war with Iran, after President Donald Trump extended the ceasefire to give Tehran more time to present a unified proposal for ending the conflict. "It's tough to have a really strong conviction at this point," said Dominic Bunning, head of G10 FX strategy at Nomura. That said, "overall it seems like both sides are more inclined to make progress than to re-escalate." "Since the war began, comments from Treasury Secretary Bessent make it seem like he recognizes that it might take Warsh some time to cut interest rates," said Marc Chandler, chief market strategist at Bannockburn Global Forex. The dollar index rose 0.22% to 98.61. The euro was down 0.32% at $1.1705. The sterling lost 0.03% to 1.3502. Against the Japanese yen, the dollar rose 0.11% to 159.54 yen.

Oil prices jumped after a surprise gasoline and distillate stock draw in the U.S., and prices got a further boost from reports of gunfire attacks on at least three container ships in the Strait of Hormuz and a lack of progress in peace talks between the U.S. and Iran. U.S. crude stocks rose while gasoline and distillate inventories posted surprise draws in the week ended April 17, the Energy Information Administration said. Crude inventories rose by 1.9 million barrels to 465.7 million barrels, while U.S. gasoline stocks fell by 4.6 million barrels to 228.4 million barrels compared with analysts' expectations in a Reuters poll for a 1.5-million-barrel draw. Distillate stockpiles dropped by 3.4 million barrels in the week to 108.1 million barrels, versus expectations for a 2.5-million-barrel drop, the EIA data showed. Brent crude futures were up 2.98% at $101.41 a barrel. West Texas Intermediate futures rose 3.20% to $92.54 per barrel.

Gold rose after dropping to more than a one-week low in the previous session on bargain-hunting even as investors await a possible resumption of U.S.-Iranian peace talks. "Perceived bargain-hunting after Tuesday's losses is also featured in (gold and silver) precious metals markets," said Jim Wyckoff, senior analyst at Kitco Metals. Gold is seeing a bit of a reprieve on the hope that the Strait of Hormuz business gets worked out after Donald Trump's statements. But the situation is very tenuous and uncertain, said Bart Melek, global head of commodity strategy at TD Securities. Spot gold was up 0.59% at $4,739.42 per ounce. Gold futures for June delivery were 0.79% higher at $4,757.10 an ounce.

[From paint to planes, Iran war lifts costs, darkens outlooks]

Companies from consumer goods to travel and mining warned that the U.S.-Israeli war with Iran is driving up costs, disrupting supply chains and hurting consumer confidence, clouding financial outlooks. The cautious tone so far in the earnings season highlights the pressure on businesses already hit by U.S. tariffs, higher input costs and weak demand before the conflict erupted in late February. While some companies stuck to their full year forecasts, executives flagged rising transport and raw material costs, particularly linked to disruption in the Strait of Hormuz, and sharply reduced visibility. TE Connectivity will have to pass on higher freight and prices of oil-based products like resin to customers if the war is prolonged, Chief Executive Terrence Curtin told Reuters. Elevator maker Otis Worldwide said its new equipment sales were hurt by war-related shipment delays and tariffs.

Boeing posts smaller-than-expected loss as recovery gains traction, shares jump

Boeing reported a much smaller first-quarter loss than analysts expected, a sign of continued operational recovery at the U.S. planemaker after years of crises that dented its reputation and left it with a mountain of debt. The company posted a $7 million net loss for the quarter, smaller than a $31 million loss during the same period 12 months ago. The core loss per share of 20 cents was far lower than the 83 cents per share average loss expected by analysts, according to LSEG data. It recorded a loss of 11 cents per diluted share, or 20 cents per share for core operations in the first quarter, compared to a 16-cent loss per diluted share a year earlier. Shares of the company rose 5.26% to $230.69. Meanwhile, Boeing CEO Kelly Ortberg told Reuters in an interview that the company is counting on the Trump administration to help unlock a long-awaited major order from China, and the company has reached "a good solution" with Chinese airlines addressing their concerns about access to critical spare parts. Best Buy taps insider Bonfig to succeed veteran Barry as CEO amid demand slowdown

Best Buy named insider Jason Bonfig as CEO, replacing longtime executive Corie Barry, in a leadership change that comes as the U.S. retailer grapples with weak consumer demand and tariff-related supply-chain pressures. The company, which operates more than 1,000 stores across North America, has been working to revive growth by expanding online sales, services and advertising as competition intensifies across the sector. As the company's chief customer, product and fulfillment officer, Bonfig has been overseeing many of these initiatives, along with the company's Canadian business and its retail media unit, Best Buy Ads. He most recently led the launch of Best Buy's online marketplace in the U.S. and the expansion of its advertising business, much like Amazon and Walmart, as retailers look to leverage their own customer data to attract brands. Barry will remain a strategic adviser for six months after stepping down at the end of October.

Micron pushes US Congress to crack down on chip tool sales to Chinese rivals, sources say

Micron is a driving force pushing the U.S. Congress to pass legislation that would put new export restrictions on equipment its Chinese competitors use to make their chips, according to people familiar with the matter. A U.S. House of Representatives panel began a session where it is set to vote on the "MATCH Act," a bill designed to close gaps in restrictions on chipmaking equipment. It would also pressure foreign companies that sell equipment to Chinese chipmaking facilities to align with export curbs on U.S. companies like Lam Research and Applied Materials. The bill targets facilities operated by China's ChangXin Memory Technologies, Yangtze Memory Technologies, and Semiconductor Manufacturing International Corp, as well as critical technology countrywide. Separately, Nvidia's powerful H200 AI chips have not yet been sold to Chinese companies, Commerce Department Secretary Howard Lutnick said, citing difficulties faced by those firms to get permission from the Chinese government. Google puts AI agents at heart of its enterprise money-making push Alphabet CEO Sundar Pichai is deepening a push into enterprise software, signaling to investors at Google's annual cloud conference that AI agents, human-like digital assistants, are a lynchpin of its strategy to monetize artificial intelligence. At the three-day conference in Las Vegas, Pichai and key Google executives will seek to position the company's AI tools as production-ready infrastructure for enterprise customers who are emerging as the industry's most reliable revenue stream. The company announced that it was unifying a set of AI products under the name “Gemini Enterprise.” Most notably, this involves rebranding and bulking up Vertex AI, a tool that allows cloud customers to select from a variety of AI models to use for business purposes. Google also announced a set of new governance and security features for AI agents. Google is seeking to outflank both its traditional cloud rivals and AI upstarts as pressure mounts to prove returns on massive generative AI spending.

PREVIEW-Software makers' best may not be good enough as AI fears mount
Salesforce will likely report its fastest quarterly revenue growth in three years, but analysts say that may not be enough, as fears that artificial intelligence would decimate software makers have sapped investor confidence in the industry. Software CEOs such as Salesforce's Marc Benioff have tried to reassure shareholders that proprietary data, decades of enterprise experience and in-house AI offerings would keep customers loyal, even as AI tools from the likes of Anthropic encroach on legal, marketing and customer-service work. Wall Street expects Salesforce's first-quarter revenue to have increased 12.5% to $9.83 billion, its fastest growth in 13 quarters, according to analysts polled by LSEG. Meanwhile, ServiceNow is expected to post slightly faster quarterly revenue growth of 21.1%, while Workday's revenue will likely increase at a slightly slower pace at 12.4%.

Deutsche Telekom and T-Mobile in early talks for mega merger, sources say
Deutsche Telekom is exploring a deal to combine with T-Mobile US and create a transatlantic telecoms giant in what would be the largest ever public merger, two people familiar with the matter said. The merger talks, long mooted and still at an early stage, could create a company with a market capitalization of nearly $300 billion, making it the world's most valuable telecoms group with more than 200 million mobile subscribers. That scale could bolster financial firepower and support further acquisitions, Morgan Stanley analysts said. The complex potential deal is aimed at reigniting growth in a stagnating telecoms sector, though it could face major regulatory and geopolitical hurdles. It comes amid strained diplomatic and economic ties between Germany and the U.S., clouded by tariffs and tensions over the war in Iran. Separately, AT&T added more wireless subscribers than expected in the first quarter, benefiting from customers opting for the telecom provider's packages bundling wireless and high-speed fiber services. GE Vernova lifts 2026 outlook as AI boom fuels power equipment demand
GE Vernova raised its annual forecasts for revenue and adjusted core profit margin, betting on surging demand from data centers and grid infrastructure. It expects revenue of $44.5 billion to $45.5 billion in 2026, compared with $44 billion to $45 billion earlier, and adjusted EBITDA margin of 12% to 14%, up from 11% to 13% earlier. Analysts on average expect revenue of $44.5 billion and margin of 13.7%, according to data compiled by LSEG. CEO Scott Strazik said the company expects to reach at least 110 gigawatts (GW) of combined gas turbine backlog and slot reservation agreements by year-end. The power unit's core profit rose 57% to $811 million in the first quarter, while the electrification unit's profit more than doubled to $528 million.

Philip Morris trims annual profit forecast amid nicotine pouch uncertainty
Philip Morris International cut its annual profit forecast amid regulatory uncertainty over its Zyn nicotine pouches and rising competition in tobacco products. A complex regulatory environment continues to slow innovation and the shift of adult smokers to smoke-free products, CFO Emmanuel Babeau said. He said Philip Morris aims to maintain Zyn's premium positioning despite increasingly aggressive pricing from rivals. Philip Morris expects full-year adjusted earnings per share of $8.36 to $8.51, down from its previous forecast of $8.38 to $8.53. Quarterly revenue of $10.15 billion surpassed estimates of $9.91 billion, while adjusted profit per share of $1.96 topped expectations of $1.83. The company said it has factored in a small impact from the Middle East conflict in its forecast, but does not expect a prolonged effect.

Health insurer Elevance raises annual profit forecast on medical cost controls
Elevance Health topped quarterly earnings estimate and raised annual profit forecast, saying it has greater clarity on medical costs for the rest of the year as it leans on its efforts to keep them in check. The company reported a medical loss ratio, the percentage of premiums spent on medical care, of 86.8% for the first quarter, while analysts expected 87.01%. The insurer expects 2026 adjusted per-share profit to be at least $26.75, compared with at least $25.50 forecast earlier, and analysts' estimate of $25.73. First-quarter adjusted profit per share of $12.58 beat the estimate of $10.82. It includes about $1 per share of non-recurring net investment income. "While it is still early in the year, the trends we are seeing give us increased confidence in the trajectory of the business," CEO Gail Boudreaux said on a call with analysts.

Insight and Analysis

In the AI era, Apple's strengths may become its constraints
Apple built its empire on control. For decades, the company's tightly managed ecosystem, spanning custom chips, proprietary operating systems and curated apps, delivered devices that were secure and easy to use. That approach helped turn the iPhone into the most successful consumer product in history, generating nearly $210 billion in revenue last year. It also made Apple the world's top-valued company for much of the past decade, a position only overtaken by artificial intelligence chipmaker Nvidia in 2024. Apple, not unexpectedly, has been cautious.

REUTERS OPEN INTEREST-Bumper US tax refunds soften energy blow. But not for long: McGeever
The U.S. tax deadline of April 15 often elicits both dread and anticipation — the administrative grind of filing, and the prospect of a refund windfall. This year, that refund could be substantially larger than usual, and it could not be better timed. Tax refunds are currently 17% higher than last year, implying a $50 billion windfall for consumers by the end of May relative to the same period last year, according to Goldman Sachs economists. This should offer a much-needed boost to consumers and the wider economy following the spike in fuel prices after the Iran war started.

GRAPHIC-Private credit funds' shares trade at steep discounts as concerns grow
Shares of private credit funds are trading at their deepest discounts to net asset values in more than 5-1/2 years as investors grow more sceptical of valuations and mounting stress in the sector. According to LSEG data, the median price-to-forward 12-month net asset value ratio for such business development companies (BDCs) stood at about 0.74 at the end of March, implying a discount of roughly 26%, the widest since October 2020. Investor concerns centre on whether reported net asset values fully reflect strains in parts of the private credit market.

Rogers Communications flags lower 2026 capex amid telecom pricing pressure
Rogers Communications forecast 2026 capital expenditure about 30% below 2025 levels, as it reins in spending amid a tough pricing environment. Canada's telecom sector is grappling with an aggressive price war as major players BCE and Telus continue to roll out aggressive pricing and offer discounts to defend their share. Rogers lowered it 2026 capital expenditure forecast to C$2.5 billion to C$2.7 billion, citing dim growth prospects. "Rogers has made the right decision to materially cut capex against a backdrop of lower industry revenue growth, but more importantly as a result of a continued adverse regulatory environment," said Scotiabank analysts.

ANALYSIS-Carney, boosted by majority government in Canada, aims for US trade deal
After securing a majority government in Canada last week, Prime Minister Mark Carney faces his biggest challenge: redefining trade with the United States under President Donald Trump. Canada, the U.S. and Mexico must agree by July 1 to keep the deal as is, insulating most Canadian goods from U.S. tariffs, renegotiate it, or hold annual reviews until its 2036 expiry. Carney, under U.S. pressure for concessions, will push for a revised deal this year that addresses tariffs against Canadian steel, aluminum and autos. Ahead of three special elections swept by Carney's Liberals last week, the PM said he needed a parliamentary majority to deal more effectively with Trump's trade war.

Canada is not a supplicant, will not let US dictate terms of USMCA review, says Carney
Canada is not a supplicant that will allow the United States to dictate the terms for a scheduled review of the United States-Mexico-Canada trade treaty, Prime Minister Mark Carney said. The three nations are due to finish their work by July 1 but the schedule has been complicated by U.S.-Canadian tensions over tariffs that President Donald Trump imposed on key imports from Canada last year. Carney says the measures mean Canada must reduce its heavy reliance on the U.S. market. Trump complains that the USMCA deal - which underpins much of Canada's economy - is unfair to the United States. "It's not a case where there is someone making demands, and a supplicant," Carney told reporters.

US Supreme Court rejects Enbridge challenge to Michigan pipeline case
The U.S. Supreme Court rejected Enbridge's bid to change the venue of an environmental lawsuit by Michigan seeking to force the Canadian energy company to stop operating an oil pipeline between two of the Great Lakes. The justices unanimously ruled that Enbridge had waited too long to seek to move the lawsuit by Democratic Michigan Attorney General Dana Nessel from state court into federal court, a venue generally considered more friendly to defendants. Liberal Justice Sonia Sotomayor, writing for the court, said Enbridge had 30 days to try to move the case to federal court, but instead waited 887 days to do so until after developments in related litigation over the Line 5 pipeline.

Toronto exchange operator to buy Cboe's Canada, Australia units
TMX Group agreed to buy Cboe Global Markets' Canadian and Australian businesses for $300 million, in a deal that further deepens the footprint of the owner of the Toronto Stock Exchange in the mining industry. "(This deal) allows us to build into a new market on the other side of the world that happens to be the second strongest mining resource market in the world. So it is such a strong, natural fit for us," TMX CEO John McKenzie said, about Australia's position in the global mining industry. The deal, which will also help boost TMX's focus on higher-growth areas such as derivatives, digital assets and prediction markets, includes Cboe Canada and Cboe Australia exchanges.

POLL-Fed rate cut pushed back to late 2026 on war-related inflation risks

The Federal Reserve will wait at least six months before cutting interest rates this year, according to a Reuters poll of economists, as war-driven energy shocks reignite already-elevated inflation. The nearly two-month war in the Middle East has led to soaring fuel prices, eroding consumer confidence to a record low and wiping out market pricing for rate cuts. Even the Fed's most dovish policymakers now warn inflation remains uncomfortably high, underscoring a lack of urgency to move. Economists have again delayed the timing for an expected cut in the latest poll. Still, most forecasters have clung to the view that rates will fall at least once more.
