Market Monitor

Stocks advanced and the S&P 500 and the Nasdaq logged their biggest monthly gains in years as solid corporate earnings offset the war-related oil supply shock that has rattled markets and sent crude prices to four-year highs. But oil prices eased and economic data showed the U.S. economy continues to grow at a healthy pace, helping as investors geopolitical tensions and close the book on a month of solid gains. The rally gained momentum throughout the session, pushing all three major U.S. stock indexes sharply higher. "A lot of the economic data calmed investors' fears," said Paul Nolte, senior wealth adviser & market strategist at Murphy & Sylvest in Elmhurst, Illinois. "Beyond that, you've got some pretty good earnings from a lot of different companies, and we're seeing that broaden out today." "Until we see some changes to the market dynamic, as well as the economy, the momentum is on the bullish side," Nolte added.

The Dow Jones Industrial

Average rose 1.62% to 49,652.14, the S&P 500 gained 1.02% to 7,209.01 and the Nasdaq Composite were

0.89% higher at 24,892.31. For the month, the S&P 500 gained 10.42%, the Nasdaq rose 15.29%, and the Dow climbed 7.14%.

Treasury yields eased as oil prices pulled back from a four-year high and traders continued to digest a Federal Reserve meeting that struck a more hawkish tone than many had anticipated. The move in oil was fueled in part by an Axios report that U.S. Central Command was set to brief President Trump on plans for further possible military action against Iran. "The greatest contribution (to the move higher in yields) is just the uncertainty as to what impact this is going to have on the U.S. economy," said Michael Lorizio, head of U.S. rates and mortgage trading at Manulife Investment Management. Benchmark 10-year notes added 9/32 to yield 4.3796%. 2-year notes rose 3/32 with a yield of 3.8792%. 30-year bonds were 5/32 higher, yielding 4.9761%.

The dollar fell sharply against the yen after Japanese authorities were reported to have intervened in foreign exchange markets to support their currency, while oil prices retreated from four year highs as investors assessed risks from the war in the Middle East. Japanese Finance Minister Satsuki Katayama the time to take "decisive" action in the market was nearing, in her strongest signal yet of potential currency intervention to prop up the sagging yen. Against the Japanese yen, the dollar fell 2.37% to 156.59 yen. "It's pretty obvious given the discussion from the ministry of finance about potential intervention," said John Velis, Americas macro strategist at BNY. "It's not really a surprise, plus the fact that the yen was in its own world as a currency during the last four weeks or so, and the intervention is pretty understandable," Velis said. The dollar index fell 0.91% to 98.07. The euro climbed 0.45% to $1.1729, while the sterling gained 0.96% to $1.3601.

Oil prices eased after hitting a four-year high of more than $126 a barrel on concerns the U.S.-Iran war could lead to a protracted Middle East supply disruption that could inflict deeper damage on the global economy. The oil markets have been in a period of heightened volatility since the conflict in the Middle East began in late February. Brent crude futures rose as high as $126.41 a barrel, the peak since March 9, 2022, but were down 3.34% at $114.09. WTI crude futures were down 1.66% at $105.11.

Gold rose on a softer dollar and easing oil prices, as inflation concerns amid the ongoing Iran war clouded the outlook for interest rate cuts. Analysts at Citi said pressure to sell gold could remain strong in the very near term due to the uncertainty in the Middle East, but expect the metal to eventually regain its appeal as a safe-haven asset. Spot gold added 1.63% to $4,615.69 per ounce. U.S. gold futures were 1.49% higher at $4,629.60 an ounce.

Google Cloud pulls ahead as Big Tech's AI bet swells to $700 billion

Alphabet's blowout cloud growth has reset expectations across major tech companies, leaving investors to recalibrate which firms are delivering the clearest returns. All four of the U.S. tech giants that reported results on Wednesday signaled that spending on artificial intelligence would not slow down, with combined outlays now set to surpass $700 billion this year, up from around $600 billion previously. Analysts and investors believe Google is scooping up a large chunk of new computing demand thanks to its AI tools for businesses and powerful custom chips that have attracted customers like Anthropic. Pichai said Google had started selling its AI chips, which compete with Nvidia's semiconductors, directly to some customers. Separately, Amazon said that restoring cloud computing operations in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates is expected to take several months. To read more, click here

Blue Owl highlights business beyond private credit after profit beat

Blue Owl executives emphasized growth in its businesses beyond direct lending, a form of private credit that has come under rising scrutiny, after the alternative asset manager beat Wall Street expectations for first-quarter profit. Blue Owl's assets under management jumped 15% to $314.9 billion driven by the real assets business. While the asset pile grew overall, growth in the segment that Blue Owl earns fees to manage came in 2% short of market expectations, Barclays analysts said. On an adjusted basis, Blue Owl's fee-related earnings per share rose to 25 cents in the quarter, compared with 22 cents, a year ago. Lilly lifts profit forecast as surging demand for weight-loss drugs offsets pricing pressure

Eli Lilly hiked its full-year profit and revenue forecasts, as surging demand for its GLP-1 weight-loss and diabetes drugs helped offset lower prices across U.S. and international markets. Whether the U.S. drugmaker can sustain momentum as pricing pressures intensify has been a top investor worry. Lilly reported a first-quarter adjusted profit of $8.55 per share, sailing past Wall Street estimates of $6.66. The low end of Lilly's new 2026 profit forecast range is now higher than its prior high end. The company now sees adjusted earnings of $35.50 to $37.00 per share, up from $33.50 to $35.00. Analysts were estimating $34.55 per share. It expects revenue of $82 billion to $85 billion compared to its previous forecast of $80 billion to $83 billion. Meanwhile, Merck beat first-quarter sales expectations on strong demand for its aging cancer immunotherapy Keytruda. To read more click here

ConocoPhillips cuts annual production targets as Iran war disrupts operations

ConocoPhillips forecast a lower annual output and excluded Qatar from its near-term outlook, citing disruption to its operations in the Middle East due to the Iran conflict. Output from ConocoPhillips' investments in Qatar, which stood at roughly $1.8 billion as of March 31, accounted for 4% of the company's total production in 2025. ConocoPhillips now expects 2026 production to be between 2.29 million barrels of oil equivalent per day and 2.325, compared with its previous forecast of 2.33 mmboepd to 2.36 mmboepd. The shale producer expects annual capital expenditures to be between $12 billion and $12.5 billion. During the first quarter, the company's average realized prices dropped 6% to $50.36 per barrel of oil equivalent, due to weaker gas prices. Its net income fell to $2.18 billion, or $1.78 per share, for the three months ended March 31, from $2.85 billion, or $2.23 per share, a year earlier.

Caterpillar expects AI-driven demand for power, construction to fuel growth

Caterpillar raised its annual and long-term revenue forecasts, as an AI-focused data center boom creates record order backlog for its power generation and backup equipment, underscoring strong momentum for the business in the coming years. "Investment in critical infrastructure programs and data centers is contributing to overall construction spending levels," CEO Joe Creed said on a post-earnings call with analysts. Caterpillar also raised its long-term average revenue growth forecast between 2024 and 2030 to 6-9%, compared with 5-7% previously. Power generation equipment sales are expected to triple by 2030 from 2024 levels, compared to a two-fold increase projected earlier, Caterpillar said in a presentation. Caterpillar posted a profit of $5.54 per share, with analysts expecting $4.62 per share. Overall revenue grew 22% to $17.42 billion, marking the biggest growth in 4-1/2 years, compared to expectations of $16.61 billion.

Cigna bumps annual profit forecast; will exit Obamacare plans by year end

Cigna slightly raised its 2026 profit forecast after reporting first-quarter earnings that topped Wall Street estimates on lower-than-expected medical costs, and the health insurer said it will stop offering Obamacare plans. Chief Operating Officer Brian Evanko, who is set to take over as CEO when Chief Executive David Cordani retires, effective July 1, said the company would exit subsidized plans offered under the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare, at the end of this year. The medical loss ratio stood at 79.8% in the quarter, representing lower costs than the 81.56% estimated by analysts. Cigna now sees 2026 adjusted profit per share of $30.35, up 10 cents from its previous forecast. Analysts expected $30.33 per share. The company earned adjusted quarterly profit of $7.79 per share, surpassing analysts' estimates by 18 cents.

Carmakers bank on $2.3 billion in future tariff refunds, risking Trump's ire

Some automakers this week got a first-quarter profit boost – at least on paper – from future refunds of tariff payments they made to the U.S. government, risking potential ire from U.S. President Donald Trump. Companies that were hit with import duties began applying for refunds last week, following a February U.S. Supreme Court ruling that struck down some of the Trump administration's tariffs. A total of up to $166 billion in reimbursements is due to importers who paid tariffs in a process that could take several months, with the auto industry among the hardest-hit sectors by Trump's tariff regime. This week, several car companies began recording that expected refund income on their books, totalling about $2.3 billion, becoming among the first companies to quantify what they are owed by the government. Trump has said the tariffs are a response to persistent U.S. trade imbalances and declining U.S. manufacturing power, and will bring jobs and investment to the nation.

Cigarette maker Altria gets a boost as Marlboro losses ease

Altria beat Wall Street expectations for first-quarter profit and revenue, as the Marlboro-maker slowed market share losses and pushed further into discount cigarettes. In the final years of his tenure, Altria's tobacco business, including the pricier Marlboro, has lost market share to discount brands as costs of living soared. The company reported revenue of $5.43 billion for the quarter ended March 31, beating analysts' average estimate of $4.58 billion. Adjusted quarterly profit of $1.32 per share also topped expectations of $1.25. Separately, Molson Coors beat analysts' estimates for first-quarter sales and profit, helped by price increases and demand for premium beer, especially in its Americas business. Royal Caribbean sees cruise demand recover, but flags impact of higher fuel costs

Royal Caribbean said bookings for its luxury Mediterranean cruises have bounced back after about a month of disruption from the Iran war, sending its shares surging. Bookings are currently running at a higher pace than last year, the company said, even as rising fuel costs linked to the Middle East conflict prompted the cruise operator to cut its annual profit forecast. The company expects adjusted per-share profit to be between $17.10 and $17.50 for fiscal 2026, down from its prior forecast of $17.70 to $18.10. For the first quarter, higher ticket pricing helped Royal Caribbean post an adjusted profit of $3.60 per share, topping analysts' estimate of $3.19. Shares ended 3.78% higher at $263.62.

Despite change atop the Fed, investor hopes for rate cuts hit hurdles

Investors are turning the page to a newly led U.S. Federal Reserve that has long been expected to have a more dovish bent, but instead faces a bumpier rates path ahead. The Fed meeting that concluded on Wednesday was set to be Jerome Powell's last as the chair of the central bank, with Kevin Warsh on track to take over. Warsh was picked by U.S. President Donald Trump, who heavily favors rate cuts, but the divisions revealed in the Fed decision showed barriers to easing.

FOCUS-Companies with cannabis-based drugs eye IPOs, private funding boost after US reclassification

Companies developing cannabis-based medicines say U.S. moves to loosen restrictions on the drug could unlock private funding and the public markets, providing a lifeline to the struggling cannabis industry. The U.S. Department of Justice last week rescheduled FDA-approved medicines and state-regulated medical marijuana products, making it easier for companies to bank and receive tax credits and deductions.

REUTERS OPEN INTEREST-Spiking central bank dissent risks stoking volatility: McGeever

From Tokyo to Washington, central bankers are becoming increasingly divided on how to handle the global energy shock. Less unity means investors should brace for more policy uncertainty, murky messaging, and volatility in the months ahead. As Brent crude hits $120 a barrel - double where it was at the start of the year - policymakers' dilemma is clear. Should they raise interest rates to quell inflation, or cut them to support growth?

Canada's February GDP grows 0.2%, annualized quarterly growth likely 1.7%

Canada's economy grew by 0.2% in February from January, matching analysts' expectations, as goods-producing industries drove gains for the second month in a row, data showed. This was the fourth consecutive positive GDP growth and follows a modest 0.1% increase in January. The acceleration in February was driven by a sharp rise in manufacturing activity, rebound in wholesale trade, transportation and warehousing and growth in mining and oil and gas extraction among others, Statistics Canada said. Canada's economy has managed to avoid a recession despite U.S. tariffs but its economy has teetered as some crucial sectors such as steel, automotive and lumber have suffered. Economists and policymakers call the successful review and continuation of the North American free trade deal critical for Canada as it has shielded over 85% of the economy from U.S. tariffs. The Bank of Canada said on Wednesday the war in Iran was also a source of major uncertainty. While Canada benefits from higher oil prices, consumers and businesses continue to be strained.

Bombardier tops profit estimates on higher private jet usage, repair demand

Bombardier beat Wall Street estimates for first-quarter profit, lifted by strong demand for repair and maintenance services and increased private flying despite higher jet fuel prices. Revenue from services jumped 25% year-on-year to $617 million, driven by demand for parts and maintenance as Bombardier's global jet fleet expands, particularly in the United States. "Despite everything going on right now, the war with Iran and Ukraine, we still see growth in flight hours," CEO Eric Martel told analysts. Private aviation, used primarily by affluent consumers, has remained resilient even as higher jet fuel prices tied to Middle East tensions have forced commercial airlines to trim flights.

Apollo, Blackstone and KKR vie for Shell stake in LNG Canada, sources say

Apollo Global Management, Blackstone and KKR are battling it out to acquire a significant stake in the mammoth LNG Canada project from energy major Shell, three people familiar with the matter said. The trio, among the world's largest asset management firms, are the remaining bidders in the auction process, run by Shell, which also garnered interest from other large money managers and infrastructure investors. Any deal is expected to be valued well north of $10 billion and could reach as high as $15 billion, according to some of the people. Everyone who spoke with Reuters asked not to be identified because the bidding is confidential.

AI-related investment, rebound in government spending lift US economy in first quarter

U.S. economic growth picked up in the first quarter as businesses boosted investment in artificial intelligence and government spending rebounded after a crippling shutdown, but the improvement is likely temporary, with the war with Iran raising inflation and eroding household purchasing power. Gross domestic product increased at a 2.0% annualized rate last quarter, the Bureau of Economic Analysis said. Separately, the personal consumption expenditures price index jumped 0.7% last month, the largest gain since June 2022, after an unrevised 0.4% rise in February, the BEA said.
